Local Channels and Affordable Broadband Everywhere in Tennessee

EchoStar and DIRECTV present benefits of merger to Tennessee

NASHVILLE, Tenn. Representatives from EchoStar Communications Corporation and Hughes Electronics Corporation today hosted a demonstration for legislators, opinion leaders and members of the press showcasing satellite-delivered digital television and high-speed Internet access. Senior executives from EchoStar and HUGHES explained how the proposed merger of the businesses of EchoStar, the parent company of DISH Network, and HUGHES, the parent company of DIRECTV, will make local TV channels and broadband available to every resident in Tennessee.

The merged company will provide local channels via satellite to each of the country's 210 television markets. Today, direct broadcast satellite (DBS) customers in only two of Tennessee's eight television markets enjoy access to their local channels via satellite. Consumers across the country will pay the same price for their DBS services regardless of where they reside.

The merger will also bridge the digital divide in Tennessee by providing consumers in every community with a competitively priced high-speed broadband solution, said Dave Tashjian, a senior executive of EchoStar Communications Corporation.

On October 28, 2001 EchoStar and HUGHES announced the signing of definitive agreements that provide for the split-off of HUGHES from General Motors and the merger of HUGHES with EchoStar.
