Message from Ed Zander □ 20 April 2007

As you know, Carl Icahn, a Motorola stockholder, has nominated himself for election to the Motorola board of directors at our annual stockholders meeting on 7 May.

Over the past week, Mr. Icahn has waged a campaign to gain a board seat in the media and in letters to our stockholders. On Monday, I sent you a letter we mailed to stockholders explaining why the board does not recommend him. Let me take this opportunity to provide additional background and thank you for your hard work and commitment to Motorola and our customers.

Motorola's board comprises highly qualified, independent leaders with deep experience and interest in our technology, our customers and our products. In addition, they bring specialized expertise in such areas as finance, regulatory matters and marketing. It's an outstanding group of men and women, each of whom is making important contributions to Motorola and the near-term and longer-term success of our company.

Motorola is always looking for additional independent directors who have relevant experience and can provide valuable insight to supplement the board's expertise. We welcome suggestions from all of our stockholders, including Mr. Icahn, and we thoughtfully considered his nomination to join our board.

We value and respect Mr. Icahn as a stockholder. He has invested in us. We are committed to an ongoing dialogue with all of our stockholders, including Mr. Icahn.

We do not believe, however, that Carl Icahn would strengthen the board of Motorola. As a result, the board of directors unanimously opposes his nomination. You'll find more information in a letter we are mailing to Motorola stockholders and that we filed today with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission.

Motorola must speak with one voice during this process. If you receive any outside inquiries on this issue, be sure to direct them to the right place:

- Financial analysts or stockholders: Dean Lindroth, investor relations
- Media representatives: Jennifer Erickson or Paul Alfieri, corporate communications

While press and media reports may be distracting over the coming weeks, I encourage you to continue in your efforts to serve our customers and look forward to our future success.

On behalf of our board and senior leadership team, thank you.

Regards,

Ed
