Ranger believes it has a better way for CA:

Corporate Governance

The CA Way

In its April 16, 2001 issue, Business Week names CA's Board one of the worst in America.

The Ranger Way

Ranger has nominated a slate of independent directors with proven records of performance in software companies and who have strong records of investment, regulatory and corporate governance experience.

Management

The CA Way

Business Week reported in its April 16, 2001 issue that the CA Board authorized the worst pay for performance in 2000:

*At the bottom of the performance heap, Charles B. Wang of Computer Associates International Inc. (CA) earned $698.2 million from 1998 through 2000 and produced a dismal shareholder return of -63%... **

The Ranger Way

Ranger believes the best way to drive profitability and growth with Computer Associates' diverse group of 1,200 products is to focus sales, marketing, development and service resources around four flexible business groups—each organized around a major segment of Computer Associates' broad range of products.

Shareholder Value

The CA Way

Of the top ten companies included in the Standard and Poor's Computer Software and Services Index, CA ranks last on price/cash flow and price/book ratios and next to last on price/revenue ratios as of June 30, 2001.

The Ranger Way

Ranger believes that market segment focus when combined with its plan to achieve incremental growth and an improved balance sheet could significantly improve these ratios and deliver greater shareholder value.

On August 29th, YOU will have the chance to decide the future of YOUR Company.

Attention Computer Associates Shareholders

Why are these men still smiling?

Charles B. Wang
Chairman

Sanjay Kumar
President and CEO

Perhaps because they recently reported a $342 million loss as a gain :

On July 23, 2001, using Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP), CA reported a $342 million loss for Q1 2002.* However, using its own pro forma pro rata model, CA was able to report a $323 million gain.*

President Kumar called the quarterly result spectacular. **

Perhaps because they believe the current CA Board will continue to pay for non-performance:

As a result of two shareholder suits settled last year after an adverse ruling by the Delaware Chancery Court, Charles Wang, Sanjay Kumar and Russell Artzt had to give back 4.5 million of the 20.3 million shares granted to them by the CA board of directors. A few months prior to the settlement, Wang said he was not worried about losing in Delaware:

I know my directors, my comp committee, he said. They'll make me whole.

Perhaps because they believe their customers have no choice but to buy from them:

[I]n a survey by blue-chip user group The Infrastructure Forum (Tif) users [were asked] how important they believed the 20 top vendors to be and how easy it was to do business with them. Rankings were based on issues such as customer support, maintenance, and contract terms and conditions. Bottom of the heap was CA
