Subject: Announcement

Dear Colleagues,

This morning, Synergetics and Valeant Pharmaceuticals International, announced that the two companies have entered into a definitive agreement under which Valeant will acquire Synergetics for $6.50 per share in cash. In addition to the upfront cash payment, Synergetics stockholders will receive additional cash payments of up to $1.00 per share if specified sales milestones are achieved following the closing. The transaction is expected to close in the fourth quarter of 2015 and is subject to customary closing conditions and regulatory approvals.

I believe that this transaction will provide some exciting opportunities for Synergetics, as the combined strengths of both companies will expand the breadth of our offerings and create a more effective competitor that is better able to meet our customers' needs in the ophthalmology and neurosurgery markets.

I know you will have many questions. We will provide as much information as quickly as we can.

I look forward to working with the team at Valeant to form an integrated company that will improve our ability to execute our strategic plans going forward. On behalf of myself, the Board of Directors and the rest of the Synergetics management team, I would like to thank all of you for your effort and support.

Valeant to buy ophthalmic surgical device maker Synergetics
September 02, 2015 5:15 pm • By Samantha Liss

Synergetics USA Inc., a company founded nearly 24 years ago in a Chesterfield garage, will be acquired by Canada's Valeant Pharmaceuticals International Inc. for $166 million.

The purchase will boost Valeant's Bausch and Lomb business, executives said.

“There are things that are in our product line that are incremental to what they have right now, so it would help fill up their bag and offer more variety,” David M. Hable, president and CEO of Synergetics, told the Post-Dispatch on Wednesday.

Synergetics, now based in O'Fallon, Mo., manufactures surgical devices for neurosurgery and ophthalmology. It has a special focus on repairing the retina.

Valeant said on Wednesday it would commence a tender offer to acquire all outstanding shares of Synergetics for $6.50 per share, a premium of 48 percent to Synergetics' Tuesday close on the Nasdaq.

The offer was worth about $166 million based on Synergetics' diluted outstanding shares as of April 30.

Synergetics shareholders also will receive additional cash payments of up to $1 per share if certain sales milestones are reached after the transaction closes, Valeant said.

Synergetics shares closed Wednesday at $6.58 a share, up 50 percent from Tuesday's closing price. The stock ended at its highest close in more than three years.

The company reported a profit of $2.9 million on net sales of $54.2 million for the nine-month period ended April 30, 2015.

As of July 31, 2014, Synergetics employed 373 individuals, mostly full-time, according to the company's last annual filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The Synergetics offer comes less than two weeks after Valeant bought Sprout Pharmaceuticals, which makes a controversial new drug to treat low sexual desire in women, for about $1 billion.

The Synergetics deal is Valeant's eighth acquisition this year.

Valeant officials did not comment on whether Synergetics operations and employees will stay in O'Fallon.

However, Hable doesn't expect the company to move.

"It's not a simple skill set," Hable said of Synergetics manufacturing here. "There's no other obvious site that they have that is doing the same thing."

The company already has reduced its manufacturing footprint. In February 2015, Synergetics completed the closure of its only other manufacturing facility, which was in King of Prussia, Pa.

Gregg Scheller, who founded Synergetics in his garage, had mixed feelings about Wednesday's news.

"It's a very strange feeling for me," Scheller said. "I don't know, emotionally, how I'm supposed to feel about this, but I'm proud of what I did there and I think it's a good acquisition for Bausch and Lomb."

Synergetics executives, shareholders win with sale
Sep 4, 2015, 5:00am CDT

Officials with O'Fallon, Missouri-based Synergetics — including President and CEO David Hable, CFO Pamela Boone and longtime Director Juanita Hinshaw— will soon cash in on their holdings in the company. But a Pennsylvania woman and two out-of-state investment firms will see even bigger paydays.

Quebec-based specialty pharmaceutical firm Valeant Pharmaceuticals International, with $8.26 billion in 2014 revenue, said Sept. 2 it would acquire Synergetics, a maker of precision surgery instruments founded in 1992, for $6.50 a share, or about $166 million in cash based on June data. In addition to the upfront cash payment, Synergetics stockholders will receive further cash payments of up to $1 a share if specified sales milestones are achieved in the company's ophthalmology business following the closing. Those include 50 cents a share if ophthalmology products achieve $55 million on a trailing four calendar quarter basis prior to June 30, 2018, and another 50 cents a share if those products achieve $65 million during the same period.

Valeant said the deal would enhance the global presence of Bausch & Lomb, an eye care company it acquired for $8.7 billion in 2013. Synergetics' stock closed up more than 49 percent Sept. 2, at $6.55 a share, its highest price since April 2012.

“We are pleased to reach an agreement with Valeant, which is a logical partner to maximize our company's growth opportunities and, importantly, this agreement creates immediate and compelling value for our shareholders,” Hable said in a statement. In an interview, Hable called Valeant an “aggressive acquirer.”

“The financial metrics are compelling,” Hable said of the deal. “We did an extensive analysis.” Chicago-based William Blair & Co. LLC assisted Synergetics in negotiations.

Synergetics counted 373 employees, the majority of whom worked full-time, as of July 31, 2014, according to its fiscal 2014 annual report filed in October. The company said then that it uses temporary staffing agencies to provide it with about 7 percent of its manufacturing staff, driving its head count to about 395 people, 300 of whom are in O'Fallon.

Hable said in the interview he did not know if current leadership would remain with Synergetics following the deal. “We have no knowledge of their integration plans or priorities or how they're going to use the assets,” Hable said of Valeant. A Valeant spokesman declined to comment.

Following the deal's closure, likely sometime in the fourth quarter, 60-year-old Hable, who was paid $519,288 in total compensation in fiscal 2014, would hold stock valued at nearly $1.5 million, based on ownership data in the company's most recent proxy, filed in November. If Hable is fired as part of the sale, he could receive payment of more than $500,000 as part of a “change of control” agreement, according to its fiscal 2014 annual report.

Juanita Hinshaw, a former Monsanto and Graybar executive who is an independent director at Synergetics, would hold shares valued at more than $2.7 million after the deal closes. And Pamela Boone, CFO, would hold stock valued at more than $1.7 million.

Other executives and directors and the value of shares they would hold (including shares subject to options exercisable within 60 days of Nov. 5, 2014) are:

Robert Blankemeyer, chairman of the board:
$65,000

- Lawrence Cardinale, director: $742,586
- Robert Dick, former chairman: $929,500
- D. Graeme Thomas, director: $214,500
- Michael Fanning, vice president of domestic sales: $627,425
- Jason Stroisch, vice president of marketing and technology: $531,206
- Jerry Malis, former chief scientific officer: $1.28 million

The primary winners are three big shareholders: Celia Slutsky, of Rydal, Pennsylvania, with 1,379,530 shares as of November 2014 that would be worth $8.97; Cortina Asset Management LLC, a Milwaukee investment firm, with 1,668,859 shares that would be worth $10.8 million; and Paradigm Capital Management Inc., a New York investment firm with 1,469,700 shares that would be worth $9.55 million.
